Diremego Settling forware in gase der wet. and those of us who came here first are selling out at a good profit, and are moving further up the river, to a place call'd Lot's town, 'tis suppered to be the place where Lot's wife turned and from the river's being so much sulter here than any where else, tho' tis salt enough any where: Among the new settlers who have lately arrived are, the Governor of Maryland, Governor

Ritner and Nick Biddle from Pennsylvania. There you are, are distinguished characters. tho' we dont think that Nick is what he's crack'd up to be, if, he couldent carry the State of Penn sylvania with all his money. We don't think there is any danger of his appetting the Gov. ernment or of setting Salt River & fire. The Lucos, it seems carry every State as fast as they Akan Whey began with the Binte of Diuand Missey and they wont sud bit they get to a future State, which I hope wont be long first ... We have a good many disappointed Locos up here with us, that they keep pretty much by the unrives. They've a shantee of their own, which they patronize, for they dont any of them "buy their grog at Rebie's", and one reason is, Robie dont trust. They too, have a coat of arms, which is an Assand's Fox deneing on eggs, encircled with the words "Experimental Philosophy." I went in to see then the other day, and one of 'em underlook to make a Loca of me, and cant y but he shook my faith considers. bly. He was a powerful uran at an argument, and he was a pious man too, if Locos can be pieus. I cant tell you all he said, but I can give you the heads of his discourse. He said all our froubles were caused by over-trading, and the unly way to prevent that, was to stop trading en-Hippiy. Rut saya he, Mr. Van Buren gent say to the people, you shant any of you trade, be-*au_ then he'd to a despot; but he can make laws that will in their operation have the same effent: Fee said abat overtrading, or in-fact, says he, leading in any way, is immoral in its tendense, unscriptural and unconstitutional. It is bumpeal in its tendency, because it, increase and the sevente and bring a surplus, into the Treatury, which is a great temptation to Sub Tressurers and other officers to be dishonest Now, says he, if there was no money in the treaenry. Sub-treasurers couldent take it, and it there was no overtrading, there d'be no money in the breakery, and if there was no trading there'd be no overtrading.

"Tis unscripturel, breuzes by trading a man can get rich; and if one can get rich, all can, and the Scripture : ye, "thow hardly shall a rich man enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." A Bit of Good Luck. A few days ago a clerin the Bank of England made, in the hurry of ousiness, a mistake which placed him in some difficulty. A person handed him a £100 note and a £50 note for sovereigns - instead of giving 150 sovereigns the clerk handed over 300 sovereigns to the person, who walked off with his price. The mistake having been discovered iel Forrester, who immediately went to the place of address mentioned on the face of one of the notes, and judging that the lucky stranger would not be in haste to return the balance, proceeded very cautiously in his inquiry. At last he observed a man where appearance answered that of the person described to him by the loser, and walking up addressed him by name. The man having replied to the address, Forrester anddruly teld him that the 150 sovereigns which were taken in a mistake at the Bank, in the course of the morning, were wanted. "One at all, and I know nothing of the sovereigns, I you received 300 instead of 150, and you must come with me." "I do sesure," presisted the man, "that I received no more than 150; I admit I was at the Bank, but got no more than I was entitled to."
